forts to improve student success through collaboration and instructional reform. It reflects the work of teachers, staff, and leadership at both Sierra Vista and Washington elementary schools and serves as a model for campuses across California.

Sierra Vista Principal Jamie Huerta praised her staff for their dedication and the transformation of the school's culture.

"We have turned things around in a way I never thought possible. If you had asked me three years ago if we'd be in the place that we are in now, I would have said 'absolutely not,'" Huerta said. "But this award represents the hard work of our teachers, our staff, and the school community. The level our teachers' collaborate is entirely different then it was just three years ago. This award is definitely well deserved. I keep telling them, next stop is Model PLC."

Sierra Vista's path to earning the recognition involved increased collaboration among staff and a focus on using student growth data to guide instruction. Educators implemented PLC practices aimed at improving outcomes by adjusting teaching methods based on student needs.

"In order for Solution Tree to put their stamp on the work at Sierra Vista, it was a labor of love in just the data reporting," Lile said. "They had to prove they were highly successful and made a significant improvement in student achievement in multiple areas. There are a lot of schools around the nation that work just as hard as this group did, with no recognition at all. For our three schools to be recognized for their work is a shocking reality."

Lile also shared remarks from Matt Navo, executive director of the CCEE, who credited Madera Unified's progress as a turning point during his tenure.

"He said the success of our three schools, and a few others, really came through," Lile said. "And in his opinion, it saved his job. Because it's that hard to do what you

Third MUSD school recognized for PLC

FOR THE MADERA TRIBUNE

George Washington Elementary School, a Bilingual Heritage Language (Dual Language Immersion) School, has been recognized by Solution Tree as a Promising Practices Professional Learning Community (PLC) at Work® for its early success in improving student achievement. The school's strong commitment to the PLC at Work process has been a key driver in making a visible, positive impact on student learning in both English and Spanish.

PLCs are built on the belief that the best way to improve student learning is through continuous, job-embedded professional learning for educators. The PLC at Work model is grounded in three core principles: a focus on learning, a collaborative culture, and a results-driven approach.

Promising Practices schools are selected based on their ability to build a strong foundation in these principles, sustain implementation for one to two years, and demonstrate measurable improvement in student outcomes. Schools must also document their strategies, structures, and cultural shifts for review by the PLC Review Committee.

To celebrate this milestone,

Washington Elementary held a school-wide event on May 9, bringing together students, staff, district leaders, and community members to honor the collective effort behind the achievement.

"We are proud of the progress we've made as a Bilingual Heritage Language school, where we've successfully brought the Professional Learning Community (PLC) process to life in both English and Spanish," said Principal Adalberto Hernandez. "This recognition reflects the dedication of our educators and their commitment to fostering collaboration, continuous growth, and improved student achievement in two languages."

Recognized schools are featured on AllThingsPLC.info, where they share strategies and results with other educators. The site, developed by Solution Tree, also offers tools, research, and resources to support schools in building strong PLCs and improving student success.

This is the third Madera Unified School District school to be honored by Solution Tree. The previous PLC awards went to Nishimoto and Sierra Vista elementary schools.
